The Portuguese Jewish Diaspora:

New-Christians, Crypto-jews, Marranos,

« People of the Nation »

(XVth - XXIst century)

CHANDEIGNE

The history of the Portuguese Jewish diaspora in the Sephardic context remains little known. In 20 panels, this exhibition tells its story, from the forced conversion of Portuguese Jews (1497) to the contemporary reminiscences of Marrano memories and its places of memory.

Persecuted by the Inquisition from 1536, the «New Christians» left Portugal, seeking a place to practice Judaism more or less freely. From the 16th to the 18th century, they participate in the profound socio-economic, religious and intellectual changes that shifted the Western world into modernity.

In spite of the great geographical and religious dispersion of this diaspora – which includes converts who became sincerely Christians, Jews, Marranos and crypto-Jews – it has managed to preserve a certain cohesion which is manifested in language, literature, liturgy, architecture, patronymics and funerary art. Although composite, it shares a common destiny that will give rise to a new form of collective belonging, designated by the term A Nação (the Nation).

The exhibition is proposed by les éditions Chandeigne and conceived by Livia Parnes.
